Quarterly commentary (3rd quarter)

Equity markets again fell sharply in September as fears of a return to global recession combined with continued turbulence in the Eurozone to drive investors away from all risky assets, even the previous "safe haven" of gold.

As you might expect, analysts have – after the market fall of course – become far more cautious on corporate earnings prospects, with upgrade/downgrade ratios heading rapidly to "recessionary" sub-30% levels, even though the quantum of average downgrade is at this stage still modest. Valuations have thus fallen to historically low levels with the world index currently trading at 11x 2011 earnings and (if the forecasts are to be believed) below 10x 2012.

Our approach has continued to suffer through this sharp market correction. One reason is our bias towards mid-cap companies at a time when investors are flocking to the "safety" of the largest stocks. At the same time the market has punished a large number of undervalued cyclical names without any evidence that their business prospects are materially deteriorating. Where the evidence has indeed been deteriorating we have of course already been selling. Looking ahead, investors should eventually refocus on those companies which are able to maintain high profitability and growth, which of course is what we shall continue to do.

The overall shape of the portfolio has changed somewhat over the past month with a reduction in industrial exposure in favour of consumers and services. Our largest overweight position remains in technology with a continuing substantial underweighting of financials. Our largest regional position remains our overweighting of North America, while we remain underweight in Europe and the UK.
