Quarterly commentary (3rd quarter)

STANLIB Asset Management

Over the quarter most of the alpha generation in our balanced funds came from stock selection within the domestic equity block, although overall asset allocation was also a contributor.

The strategy was directionally unchanged in the third quarter of 2011 whereby, from a tactical asset allocation perspective, the underweight domestic equity and bond position was maintained, given the continued macro uncertainty surrounding peripheral Europe, as well as the sovereign debt downgrade risk in greater Europe and potential slowdown in China. However, the domestic equity underweight was increased and bond underweight reduced given the increasing risk to a growth slowdown both in SA and globally. The overweight offshore equity position was maintained given the relative attractiveness of offshore equity markets relative to the domestic market. The prudence in equity stock selection was retained given the continued uncertainty as to the longevity and sustainability of the global economic recovery, together with the risk of margins peaking at record levels in many sectors and therefore earnings being close to peak levels for this business cycle.

The weighting to cash also remained overweight and given the expectation for income generation the manager was "fully" invested in property.
